A sense of purity. Serenity of space. Calm color and clean design. Whether it's traditional, eclectic or contemporary, this is the philosophy of Jeffrey King Interiors.

The 15-year-old interior design firm, made up of King and associate Amy Winstanley, has designed the homes of many of its clients' owners and stakeholders. Whatever the profession or income, however, the rules of good design remain the same, says King.

"Good design means adding our life's choices," he says. "It's about thinking things through. Knowing when someone needs to pass their keys. When everything is in its place, it feels harmonious. That's our goal." Winstanley says the pair is currently inspired by classical forms and colors commonly found in nature.

"Our vision is expressed through texture, pattern and color, with a strong emphasis on proportion. Our goal is the successful marriage of all of these elements." When it comes to home, says King, home should be the place where you can recharge your soul. It's a haven where you should be able to unwind before launching the next day. He says, "Great design should inspire and support a beautiful life."
